A short time ago a discussion arose in Chicago as to the relative duty of lawyers and newspapers, and the following query occurred to me: What would be said of any respectable journal that should take a fee for trying to make black appear white—that should undertake the defense of a notorious murderer, for instance? Not secretly, and while pretending to be secretly, and while pretending to be impartial—that, of course, would be intensely hypocritical and dishonorable—but openly and notoriously? The accused party would say, for instance, "I want defenders. I will hire Lawyer Such-a-one and newspaper So-and-so." What an outcry would go up! and yet what is it that makes such an act highly dishonorable on the part of a newspaper, and able on the part of a newspaper, and perfectly proper and permissible on the part of an attorney? Is newspaper honor held too high, or is legal honor too low? I believe the time will come when a lawyer's duties will be confined to seeing that murderers and highway robbers have a fair and just trial ac cording to law, and when no amount of money will be allowed to convert them into paid eulogists of dangerous

ARTEMUS WARD'S HUMOR.

Reminiscences of His Career as Cleveland Newspaper Man. CLEVELAND, May. 25.—Mr. George Hoyt, the associate editor of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, in a casual conversation with the writer last night, gave some unpublished points touching his friendship with Artemus Ward when the two worked together in the Old Plain Dealer Office. "In those early days before Ward was famous," said Mr. Hoyt, "he was plain Charlie Brown, and it was not until he left us that the final 'e' was added. He had been do-ing some local work on a Toledo paper, and some of his quaint squibs had attracted the attention of Mr. J. W. Gray, editor of the Plain Dealer. Correspondence between the two resulted in Browne's arrival in Cleveland, where he went to work as a reporter, it was then a compositor on a small newspaper called the Daily Review, and, having a taste for making cartoons, I produced a little cut representing the ideal showman, Artemus Ward in the act of genial composition at his desk. It pleased Gray, and he placed it at the head of each of Ward's letters in the Plain Dealer. It pleased Browne also and he adopted it as the only correct likeness of the showman, requiring his subsequent illustrators, Mullen, Stevens and others, to re-produce it wherever they had occasion to represent Ward. 1 soon changed my situation and held a case in the Plain Dealer composing room. Ward came up to where I was at work one day and said: "I am glad that you are here. Hereafter you shall be my Cruikshank." I shall never forget how he looked on that occasion. He was long, lank and here the appearance of a country. bore the appearance of a country gawk. His hair was long, his trousers too short at the feet and bagging at the knees. Before he went to New York he was making plans for a book, and I made a couple of dozen sketches for it, including an elaborate title page, consisting of a portrait of Ward surrounded by the accessories peculiar to his calling. Browne took them for submissien to Derby & Jackson, his publishers, but through some piece of characteristic care-lessness he lost the whole lot before reaching New York.

always in a giggle while putting his jokes on paper. When he had a particularly good one, he would call on me to listen. I remember the Mormon letter which described Ward's interview with Brigham Young, and his making a note of some Mormon statistics'-especially of an item in regard to Brigham's wives—some of whom, as Brigham declared 'were sealed to me.' 'Whereabouts?' asked the showman; and I can still hear Browne laugh over that conceit. seemed as though he would shake himself to pieces. He was in fact nothing but a wag, but in that line he was a genius. He could never talk seriously on anything but the ludicrous side a subject. It was Browne who first added the 'ist' to words designating a person's calling—'fightist,' 'a shootist,' and a 'sculpist.' The latter title is the one he always bestowed on me. His resources as a wag were bound-Once he burst into the less. green-room of Carncross & Dikey Minstrels at Philadelphia, and insisted upon going on, and on he went in spite of everything, guitar in hand, in full cork. He was going to Detroit once on a short vacation, and engaged me to do his city work during his absence. course I was new in that line, and in order that I might fully appreciate my burdens and re sponsibilities just before he left he bought me a tow string about a foot and a half long, and told me I must furnish about that much copy each day, and left the measure on my desk as a reminder. It was all a serious matter with him as his idea was that so much copy meant a fulfillment of his routine task, no matter what that matter was nor from what source it was obtained. Paper and pencil were al-ways at hand, and if a happy thought struck him at night he would jump giggling and fasten it. B. H. Barney, Agent of the great Western Dispatch, was Brown's room-mate at the time, and he tells some extraordinary stories about his eccentric companion. I used to go up to his room to help him get up those tremendous full page burlesques that Mr. Gray so delighted in. The most elaborate

A Good Dog and Horse Story From Our Dumb Animals.]

A lady and gentleman residing in Aiken, S. C., own a pair of ponies, also a spaniel. Last year, as their custom is, they sent these animals out of town, about three miles distant, to their farm, to remain during their absence through the summer.
When they returned in the fall they traveled home on horse-back, and, having these horses at their town home, did not send for the popies at their town home. for the ponies at once. Henry Boyd Mears, late paymaster in the United States navy, was committed to the asylum at Napa yesterday as insane. Mears is forty-one years old, a native of Indiana and single. He came from Indiana only six or seven days ago, aud his malady made its first appearance about the time of his arrival. He has lucid intervals but during his insane moments he imagines himself to be the Emperor of Russia, and he is violent toward those with whom he has to deal.

The Ride of Three Cowboys to Death
--An Extraordinary Exhibition of Grit.

Denver, Col., News, June 12th.

There arrived on the Burlington train last night a well-known citizen of Geeley, who will probably die from the effects of injuries sustained from one of the most harrowing accidents that has a place in the history of round-up sensations in the West: The victim is Charles Hughitt. The Little Frenchman range, in Southwestern Nebraska, perhaps one of the most cele-brated cattle sections of the country. In that neighborhood Hughitt was one of the most noted among the cowboys. A college graduate, he combined intelligence with that rare courage which the better class of cowboys always display on the range. He was more than val-

On the day in question the herds of the several stockmen were well gathered on the brink of a large mesa which overlooked the Little Frenchman River. The bluff was at least one hundred feet above the stream. While the cattle were being cut out a steer broke away and made a dash along the edge of the yawning chasm. Beneath was the swiftly passing water and sharp jutting rocks. There were sharp jutting rocks. There were 150 cowboys in the circle, the number being equally divided among three outfits. A representative of each put spurs to his horse and made the chase. Hughitt was the foremost. Following him closely were William Thompson and John Green.
All three circled lassos above their heads and dug the spur points into their horses' sides until the blood spurted. It was a rivalry of horsemanship and herding valor. Along the edge of the awful precipice the maddened steer plunged, the three ambitious horsemen closely pursuing and awaitinga n advantage. When about two hundred yards away from the herd, and as the surrounding cowboys were about to utter another yell of encour-agement, a cry of destruction and death went heavenward. The served springing to his feet. His horse responded to the release, and the rider, after some difficulty, mounted. The twain, by a circuitous route, then slowly climbed back to the mesa. Dismaved by the terrible catastrophe, the cowboys were still standing benumbed with dread when the maimed man appeared among them. Meanwhile a descent was made into the canyon by a rescuing party. The steer, the cause of the disaster, escaped injury. Green was found almost buried and dead. He was bruised considerably, and all his limbs were found broken. Thompson was found dead and fearfully mutilated. The pommel of his saddle had completely disemboweled him.

It was twenty-eight miles to Culberston Station and a weary night's ride. The party escorting Hughitt pever heard a word of suffering from his lips. Finally he began to bleed at the lungs, and a halt was made to determine the extent and nature of his injuries. He was dismounted and examined. Imagine the surprise of the escort when they found that he was maimed almost to death. His collar-bone was broken, his right arm was fractured in two places, and from his right side there protruded two broken ribs. Add to all this the fact that he was also internally injured, and the condition of the sufferer can be realized. Completely worn out by the long journey, the party arrived at Culbertson about noon yesterday. When the station hove in sight the sufferer revived and began to express hopes of his recovery. He was placed on the afternoon train, arriving at the hour stated.

"That is the gritties man I ever met," said the cowboy, in rounding off his account of the occurence.

Consistent Christians Wanted

What is wanted immediately, according to the Christian Advocate, is a vast increase in the number of thoroughly consistent professors of religion. They are wanted for the sake of the world, for the help of perishing souls. The words of Adam Clarke, though uttered for a past generation have lost none steer and horsemen disappeared simultaneously.

The party rushed to the point of lookout on the chasm only to see beneath the mangled bodies of dead any dying. While the members stood paralyzed on the brink, yet irresolute as to what the should do, Hughitt was obof their force. "What a pity

Wilk and Millet.

A Dairy Farmer.]

I have long tried all kinds of forage known to the country, and finally settled on millet as preferable, whether cut green for soiling or cured for hay. There are two kinds—the common (pani-cum meliaceum) and the golden. The latter, some contend, is superior to the former, and the reason it is not most generally cultivated is that the retail price of the seed is about $2.50 per bushel, while that of the common is only $1.50. This ought not to be considered, for the difference in value of the forage may more than make up for it. If a considerable quantity of seed was taken at one time it could be bought at a liberal discount, and a sufficient number of farmers can be generally got together to form a club for such a purpose.

The soil for millet should be of good quality, and if not pretty rich, it must be made so by plentiful manuring, for it is only a waste of seed and the labor of cultivation to undertake to grow it in poor land, especially if it be a hungry sand or stiff clay. The soil must be free from weeds and well pulverized before sowing. A previous carefully cultivated corn, potato or other root corp, leaving the ground clean and, in good heart, is an excellent pre-paration. Sow a bushel of seed to the acre, brush in well and roll. It matures in six or eight weeks after coming up. In a favorable season we may calculate on a yield of green forage sufficient, if cured, to make two or three tons of hay. For the latter purpose it must be cut when first coming into blossom. otherwise the stalk will become too hard and stiff to make choice winter forage for an extra production/of milk.

Millet may be sown as early in the season as corn-planting, and if the climate be so mild as to cirry warm weather into and through October, it can be sown in successive weeks through June. In this way it would prolong the crop green for soiling till supplemented with sweet corn. Hungarian grass (Pernicum Germanicum) is often called millet. This is also an excellent forage crop, green or dry, but not equal in value, I think, to true millet, nor does it yield so great a burden per acre. Still it is worthy of cultivation, and perhaps some soils are more suitable for it than for millet. Considerable experience by each farmer in the cultivation of both will be necessary to decide this question. There are other plants also commonly called millet, which, after being tried pretty thoroughly, seem to be discarded, and our farmers eler.

settle down upon the two first described above as the best for the purpose of producing an extra flow of milk.

A Tough Husband.

A negro woman entered into a conspiracy with a man to get rid of her husband, and fixed rope through the upper floor of the house while her husband was absent, and when he returned home the wife met him at the door and greeted him with many kisses and decoyed him under the hole, while the man on the upper floor dropped the noose over his head; then the wife held her husband's hands, and the man up stairs pulled the rope. When they thought the hasband was dead they took him down and dragged him off and covered him up for dead. When they had left, the old fellow, like Sindbad the sailor, stretched out. The guilty parties, hearing of his resurrection, fled to Pimlico county, N. C., where they were arrested and lodged in jail .- [Newberne Jour-

The Diamond Eye of a Hindoo Idol.

The grand imperial crown, originally made in the reign of Emperor Paul I., is estimated to be worth 3,000,000 roubles. The smaller crown valued at more than half a million is distinguished by the delicacy of its workmanship.

In the sceptre sparkles one of the largest diamonds known to exist, weighing one hundred and ninety-four and three-fourths carats. It is about the size of a pigeon's egg and formed at one period the eye of the great Hindoo idol representing Brahma. The story is that it was stolen by a Frenchman, who sold it to Nadir Shah, upon whose death it passed into the hands of the Armenian Scahfras. The latter having bought it at Bagdad for 50,000 piastres, and sold it again in 1772 for 450,000 roubles to the Empress Catherine .- [London Daily News.

A correspondent of the American Agriculturist gives the following plan for preserving wagons: The experience of a California stage proprietor in oiling wagons lead me to try his plan for prolonging the usefulness and strength of wagons. He soaked in oil all the wood-work of his vehicle before it was put together and dis-covered that he had little need of repairs. The oil used is crude petroleum. I wash my wagons with it twice, even to the end of the pole. It is quick work with a good brush. An application once in six or eight weeks will suffice to save me from repairs, except of a slight character. I ascribe these results to the oil preventing the wood from shrinking or swelling. The cost of crude oil is but a trifle, and the application of it a very insignificant item compared with the price of smith work and the increased durability of the wagon. Petroleum oil is better than other oils because of its superior penetrating character.

It is said that by local option elections in Georgia the sa-loons in fifty counties have been closed. This is better success than has attended the method of restricting the evils of intemperance in other localities. One difficulty with this plan has been that after a community has decided not to permit li-censes to be granted, it has not had moral force sufficient to compel obedience to the law which forbids selling without license. In Georgia, however, a more effective public sentiment seems to prevail, for it is said that the morel force which core that the moral force which carried the elections against licenses has been sufficient to enforce the law.

Fitted for Society. From the Boston Transcript.

A ten year old girl of Dennison, La., studied night and day to excel her class. Suddenly her memory left her, and now she is an idiot. This is sad. Had her brain withstood the strain she might at some day become a school teacher with the princely salary of $200 a year. Now there is nothing left for her but to marry another idiot with a pocketful of money and become a society favorite.
